OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

New York, April 1st. '94.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE APPEAL:—I am struggling with a temptation to go out into the balmy air today in the face of the evils which are sure to beset me in the way of hats with tons of bricks under them and pennies with strings tied to them.

Of course I would not stoop to pick up a measly penny, especially if I thought it would be jerked away. Mere wealth is not my only object in life. The question is, could I resist kicking a hat if I saw it, knowing that it might hurt my greatest and most illustrious toe.

Once I saw two hat episodes on All Fools' Day, and those three words describing the day, remind me how universally the day is observed, and what a lot of disciples celebrate the occasion.

On a crowded street a lot of youngsters had a tile, battered and worn. It had evidently been lambasted early and often. The kids built a small stone house under it once more and laid in wait for a victim. He came, he saw, he —, well he lifted up the old chaplain in his hands, shook out the bricks and brown stone front, and then replaced the remnant on the sidewalk. He was a big, burly man, probably a foot-ball maniac. At any rate when he "hailed off" and belted that hat with his number nines, it nosed upward like a balloon. When it rose over a low house top, the wind caught it and away it went. The kids let out a prolonged wail that fairly made my heart bleed. It is too bad to destroy childish joy and merriment.

The other episode was different. A dude with a silk stove-pipe affair got caught in a young, undeveloped cyclone and his shining headpiece was ripped off from his initial head and went scurrying down the street.

It stopped at a corner just as a joyous celebrator of the day came along. The man carefully poked the hat with his cane to ascertain whether or no the usual brick accompaniment was under it and then gave it such a swift, hilarious kick that it was stabbed fairly through on a picket fence near by and the speechless owner just flopped over in a dead faint.

Perhaps some of your readers remember some stories that appeared periodically in some of the San Francisco papers, relating incidents of the famous Johnson street darkey poker club of this city. At any rate many of them will call to mind that Thompson street is supposed to be the heart of the negro quarter of great New Amsterdam.

Well, I have walked the whole length of Thompson street twice without seeing a single darkey. The "colored gentlemen," the "uncle Rastuses," "de brack chillun," do not roost on that street.

I saw dagos there almost exclusively. It is a suburb to the Mulberry street Italian quarter, tho' a long way removed therefrom. Only recently I noticed in a paper here that Thompson street is the abode of the Senators from Africa, but that is all a myth. I want your people to be set straight on the matter at any cost.

A characteristic of the Dago which I have not mentioned before is the proclivity of the women to make boasts of burden of themselves. They may be seen on nearly any street at almost any hour of the day, carrying immense piles of wood or huge sacks of paper scraps, gleaned from the streets and refuse barrels. They lug everything on their heads and can balance a cord of wood or a hundred weight of rags as easy as you and I could fall off a log or downstairs. Sometimes they make a wad of rags to place between the load and their skulls, but frequently their psyche knot is their only protection from the hardness and weight of the pack. Of course the jags of wood etc. frequently protect them from the elements, the generous expense of timber or sucking serving the purposes alternately of parasols and umbrellas. To a tender foot, like me, it looks like a house had fallen on the women and that they not only never knew it but also that they were actually trotting off with the ruins. The men uphold the dignity of their race by a total abstinence from any such degrading labor.

The women who pick over the ash barrels on the sidewalks are very expert in their accomplishments. They can "work over" a lot of tailings from a boiler room or kitchen or factory and extract a much larger percentage of pay dirt than the mills at Empire ever think of doing. When the slimes go through their hands there is nothing left but the escape of which need worry the stockholders.

They have their regular refuse routes, up one side of the street and down the other—just like a cocktail route in your part of the country. Everything is peaceful and harmonious with them and many work over one heap of rubbish without a single dissension. You might suppose that this search, which at any moment may turn up some unexpected treasure, would excite covetousness and malice, but it doesn't—which goes to show that people are not always spoiled by prosperity.

THE INDUSTRIAL ARMY.

The San Francisco Contingent on the Way East.

The Journal of yesterday says: The San Francisco contingent of the Industrial Army broke camp at Oakland yesterday and arrived at Sacramento about 12 o'clock. A substantial dinner was provided for the men by the city, and their number was augmented at the Capital by 200 recruits. Arrangements were made at Sacramento with the railroad company for transportation to Ogden and a special train carrying several hundred of them left the city. The men are said to be well-behaved. They committed no depredations or acts of violence at Oakland, where they were camped for several days, nor at Sacramento.

The intention of the railroad company is said to be to take them through to Ogden on passenger time. The train on which the men are traveling was reported to arrive here at 4 o'clock this morning.

Twenty-three crowded coaches passed through Reno yesterday. A gang of thirty who wanted to join the army at that place were given no opportunity to do so.

Thumb Sawed.

Charlie Clarke came near losing the thumb of his left hand at the box factory yesterday. The saw he runs is brought into position by means of a lever worked by the foot. Clarke's foot slipped off the rest, bringing the saw into position before he was ready, sawing his thumb nearly off close to his hand. Dr. Lee took several stitches in the cut.
